The Plague of Fabiola.Bacterial contamination of the cervicovaginal environment in relation to sexual activity and contraceptive use. To assess the effect of sexual activity and contraceptive use on the cervicovaginal environment. Sixty-five women participated in a randomized, cross-over study with two different study periods, one in which they used no contraception and another in which they used oral contraceptives. The cervicovaginal environment was assessed at the end of each study period, as follows: cell count and sexual activity and their relationship; lactic acid production; pH; and bacterial colony-forming units (CFU). Vaginal cell count and lactic acid production decreased and the pH increased with the application of the contraceptive. The bacterium staphylococcus epidermidis was the most frequently isolated microorganism in both study periods. The women with bacterial CFUs > or = 10(3) showed a significantly greater number of sexual intercourses than those with lower CFUs. The application of the contraceptive causes changes in the cervical environment that may affect its microenvironment in a way that influences the outcome of infections, either endogenous or exogenous, of the genital tract.? I can't help but to feel that the lack of solid, consistent drive on the team this year had a lot to do with all the coaching changes over the past three years. And with the new coach comes a new system that has yet to gel. -- What were the biggest keys to UCLA's success last season? And which one(s) should be the biggest focus going into the season? This is a fantastic question. While I don't necessarily have all the answers, I think we had three key reasons that made us a threat last year. 1. Offensive consistency. From game 1 to game 38, we struggled to get the big play. That was the biggest single thing that had to go our way in order to put us in position to win. The Bruins had to make plays, all the time, and our team needed to be consistent at making those plays. 2. Defense. This season, we have some key parts back, but if we can hold serve against the run and come up with big stops in key situations, we will be very successful. 3. Reputation. When I got here, people asked me whether we had any special reputation or not. It was humbling, but it made it clear that people saw that
