I've seen the following regex in a certain source code: ((?[w.+]+)@[?([w.]+)]) Can someone tell me what does \b mean in this regex? A: \b means a word boundary, i.e. between two word characters. In the first ([w.+]+) part, \w means [A-Za-z0-9_] (so one or more alphanumeric characters and an underscore), + means one or more. The @[?([w.]+) means one or more word characters or periods, the backreference is named domain. So the part [w.+]+ is a valid email address, but is not restricted to start at a word character. If the domain part of the email addresses you are after consists of only words, you could use this pattern. Example: If you want to be more restrictive, you could use something like: @[?([w.-]+)\b\b is a zero-width negative look-behind assertion, so it means "before this point, there can be no word characters (not including -)". Q: What do you call this expression? The normal form of "the subject/predicate/object" is : A has been watched by B B watched A A watched B B watched A A watched B B watched A But there is another form, where we can use the verb first and then the subject: A watched B B watched A A watched B What do you call this other type of expression?
