A: I have worked with a number of government-wide support groups for the government, and I am pretty familiar with those of the US Federal Government, some of which have a pretty sizeable (and active) user base. I cannot help you specifically, but I do offer a few thoughts on the topic. The term "support group" has, for me, taken on a number of different meanings. The most common one is, in my experience, the frequent user's group for any online service, or any sort of mailing list. There is a sub-group, within the larger user's group, for that service, which is usually a good place to start looking for information and support. Another common form of support group, is one in which there is a set of group members who provide a "one-on-one" sort of assistance, and several of those members are part of a larger support group where there are "offices" to encourage communication, offer direction, and get involved in the community at large. I've also seen a third type of support group, where there is little interaction between the members. What you usually find in those cases is a direct service, such as counselling or religious services. If I were to hazard a guess, I would think that an American Veteran's group would probably fall into the "we meet together for a specific purpose" model. From
