This invention relates to a golf ball retriever and more particularly to a ball retriever that can be used by a player to pick up a golf ball that may be buried in a hazard area of a golf course. The ball retriever of this invention also can be used by a player to bring an ailing ball to the player's feet. Golf ball retrievers are used to retrieve golf balls from a hazard area of a golf course. There are various types of golf ball retrievers that are available. In general, these golf ball retrievers use either a magnet or a ferromagnetic member to attract the golf ball. A problem associated with this prior art approach is that a golf ball attracted to a magnet may be dislodged by a strong wind, even if the golf ball has a slight wind orientation. This is because a magnetic force is inherently unstable and sensitive to local magnetic field perturbations. Another problem with a magnetically attractive golf ball retriever is that a force tends to attract the golf ball back to the ground, thereby retarding the player's ability to attract the golf ball to the retrieval apparatus. Some prior art golf ball retrievers use a magnet and a ferromagnetic object to attract the golf ball and another magnet to repel the golf ball. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,929,980; 4, f3e1b3768c
