My remote computer is in the same domain, and it's running apache2, php, and mysql. When I go to my local server from my friend's computer, it works fine. The webdav module was built for use with the webdav protocol from Apache. For more information about webdav servers and clients see the following documents: Apache 2.2 WebDAV Server Guide, Apache 2.2 WebDAV Proxying Guide, How to Configure a WebDAV Client for Microsoft Windows, How to Configure a WebDAV Client for Linux, How to Configure a WebDAV Client for Macintosh. If you are not getting 403 status when trying to access the remote directory, then it means that your webdav client is not configured properly. Verify that your webdav client is configured properly. If you are not able to connect to the webdav server, make sure that you are able to access it. Open the webdav client and verify that you can access the directory that the webdav server is serving up. If you cannot access the directory that the webdav server is serving up, contact your server administrator to get help configuring the server. If the server administrator cannot fix the problem, check the documentation that came with your server. Verify that you can access the directory that the webdav server is serving up. It is possible that the directory is being served up using a different protocol. Open the webdav client and check the protocol that it is serving up. You should be able to change the protocol by opening the "Advanced" tab.
