Gene expression is controlled through epigenetic mechanisms, and also involves the process of DNA demethylation and DNA hypermethylation. DNA hypermethylation is mediated through a family of DNA-binding proteins known as methyl-CpG binding domain proteins (MBDs). MBDs are maintained through an orderly degradation mechanism, involving the zinc-dependent enzymes, the ten-eleven translocation (TET) and TET-associated proteins. The TET-catalysed hypermethylation-deamination system has been proposed to keep genomic loci methylated, while preventing the inappropriate hypermethylation of genes required for cell identity. Here we discuss the role of DNA hypermethylation and MB
