And with such a close-up view of the notorious top-dollar-stripper-to-penitentiary illegal baccarat game, there is no doubt who is more fully clothed. A staff member at the Daniel Basta Bistro, a strip club in Vancouver's gritty Sunset community, said he ordered the club to immediately stop advertising the iPad for sale. On Saturday night, an employee entered the front office of the club and took a picture of an iPad, showing a close up of an iPad, he said. He asked the employee if he knew what it was, and the employee said, "It's a strip club." "And that's all he said," the employee said. The employee took the iPad to an area of the club where he thought it would be safe, and quickly called the RCMP. The iPad is one of three found by the RCMP. (CBC) Within 30 minutes, the employee said, the RCMP were knocking on the door. "They went upstairs, where they found the iPad and took that and went upstairs and then brought some people down. We closed the office," the employee said. A police officer brought two iPad models to the office, one of which showed pornography on the screen, the employee said. "That's why I didn't want to take a picture, because I didn't want anything to do with it
