Image: Getty Women are doing a better job at taking on “men’s work” at work, according to a new study. For years, we’ve been told that women aren’t as comfortable or naturally good at “career-related work” like leadership and management, yet now this is changing, according to a new study by the consulting firm PricewaterhouseCoopers. The big question is why? Researchers surveyed nearly 4,200 millennials between the ages of 20 and 30 and found a significant majority (71 percent) of millennial women surveyed felt more confident about talking to customers and supervising colleagues. In addition, the majority of young women want to work in roles that are “generally acknowledged as more suited to the female gender, such as beauty and personal care.” The study also said the majority of millennial women “want to move away from office-based roles, the majority of which are still predominantly occupied by men.”

I’m not surprised to see women taking these on. And most of us have female parents so we know where this comes from. But what about men?

Could the role reversal between the sexes mean more men are taking on traditionally female roles? PwC says the results indicate that millennials aren’t all having it easy when it comes to career advancement and there’s still a lot of work to do. “Our study shows a generational shift, with more women from all age groups reporting interest in high-level leadership and career-related roles, while men were less likely to express a desire to progress in these roles,” said Hamish Grant, research director at PwC. As women are now moving into more traditionally male roles, they details.Q: Why is my button appearing sideways in IE? I have a div with a width of 100% set on it.

Inside that div is a button with display:inline-block set. I'm showing this on a 768px monitor, so my button is inline, but in IE it is being rendered like this: Note: The end side of the image is not aligned with the end of the button. Is there any way to make it render this correctly? Update: The div, the button, and the image on this JSFiddle. The button is being rendered differently on the actual site as well. Update 2: The browser is IE 10. A: The display settings are inherited by child elements. Your button is inside of a block. Your button is set to display inline-block. Your div is set to display: block. Your button's display property is being inherited. You can override a property on an element by putting it in your stylesheet: .foo { display:

inline-block; } If you want to keep your styles as they are now, your best bet is to put your button inside of a relatively positioned div.

VICTORIA — The people who take health care seriously should know that the bureaucrats who administer it aren't the real problem, says one former veteran health bureaucrat. "We need to protect and defend the public interest when it comes to the health care system," wrote Philip Lee, who resigned last year as the
