NetherRealm Studios today introduced the closed beta for Realm of the Mad God, a free-to-play action role-playing game (RPG) for PC. Available on Steam, the game offers a mixed approach, combining both standard and free-to-play elements. Once you're in, you'll be transported into a world full of dangerous creatures and easy-to-kill monsters, with a wide variety of environments, items, weapons and skills to master. You can access those skills at any time, enabling you to switch tactics instantly to keep your enemies on their toes. Furthermore, Realm of the Mad God includes a variety of modes, including: single-player campaign, arcade mode, co-op, group-focused PvP mode, and a survival mode. The game features four main characters, with more to come in future updates. Each character has different skills, and using them together builds a powerful team of eight. When it comes to monetization, Realm of the Mad God includes two main gameplay elements: real money and in-game gold. For example, the in-game currency can be used to upgrade weapons, forge equipment and even complete quests. In addition, players can purchase gold packs, in which you'll receive gold in exchange for real money. You can also buy gold in packs using real money, as well as with in-game currency. The Start screen has been the home to Windows 8 applications for quite some time now, but it doesn't stop there: Microsoft wants to throw a little more Android goodness into the mix, as it's launching a portal for Android apps in the Start menu. Even more importantly, the company has said that it plans to make the Android apps compatible with the Windows Runtime for WinRT, so that apps will have more seamless support with the Windows desktop and tablet apps. If you're an Android user, this is quite a big deal, but it's even more awesome if you're a WinRT user, as you'll be able to use the Android apps on the Windows 8 platform. With that said, here are the top 5 reasons you need to check out the new Start Menu portal. You get to use all of your Android apps directly from the Start menu When you search for an Android app in the Start menu, you can actually use that app right away. Instead of having to launch it from the Store app, you can jump directly into the app and use it right away. It's a pretty huge step up for Windows users, especially since the Store app doesn't let you install Android apps in the first place. The only way you'd be able to get Android apps on Windows is by sideloading, which requires developers to first bring the apps over to Windows
