with AutoCAD 2010 Express AutoCAD has both a pre-installed version and a free version. The pre-installed version requires a license from Autodesk, available through their website. The free version is available with MS Windows 7 Ultimate, Windows 8, and Windows 8.1 operating systems. Windows 8.1 operating systems come with AutoCAD 2011, but may not include the MS Office Standard or Extended 2007 versions. If they do, you will need to purchase them separately. Windows 8.1 operating systems are the first versions to have the Explorer shell. Windows 8 operating systems, by contrast, have a new user interface, named "Modern UI" (also known as "Metro"). A developer can obtain the source code for AutoCAD from the Autodesk website. When it was released, the Windows operating system included a built-in text editor called Notepad. AutoCAD is delivered with a Notepad replacement called Editpad. In addition, it comes bundled with a text-based command-line interface, based on the Unix C shell known as AutoLISP. Microsoft announced that it will no longer distribute Notepad as a pre-installed application with Windows in October 2012. A number of applications are used to automate the drawing creation process. They are designed to be used with the various AutoCAD formats (DXF, DWG, DGN, DFX, IES). They are referred to as 'plug-ins', as they typically can only be used with AutoCAD. There are a number of GUI-based applications designed for a user interface familiar to Microsoft Windows users, such as Paint.NET, PhotoImpact, and IrfanView. AutoCAD can also be used with a WYSIWYG design program, such as Balsamiq Mockups, and/or with a drawing creation application, such as CorelDRAW. In these cases, the WYSIWYG editor and/or creation application works with one or more native file formats, such as DXF or DWG, depending on the application. AutoCAD can export to these formats. Standards and certification AutoCAD complies with industry standards including: ANSI Z39.48 IEC 61131-1:2001 CAD Files – Part 1: Digital model exchange file format IEC 61131-1:2001 CAD Files – Part 2 5b5f913d15

The proposal would prevent corporations from purchasing "investments and holdings of fossil fuel corporations," according to sponsor Sen. Jeff Merkley (D-Ore.) and fellow sponsor Sen. Chris Van Hollen (D-Md.). Merkley and Van Hollen sent the bill to the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee on Tuesday, and it would need a full vote of the Senate to become law. Fossil fuel companies have long played a big role in campaigns to undermine U.S. climate change policy, so it's natural for Democrats to want to cut out any such funding.
