I have a login screen with a login button that correctly opens an Account Screen when the user presses it. However, when the user presses the login button, a hidden UITableView is pushed on the screen. The first time the user logs in, the tableview appears. Subsequently, when the user logs in again, the tableview disappears and is replaced by the Account Screen. When I run my program in the simulator, the login screen and LoginViewController appear and the tableview disappears. When I press the login button, the screen freezes, and no other elements are visible in the simulator. (I'm currently running on an iPhone 5c.) A: This is because the current view controller is the LoginViewController and not the MainViewController. You need to make a switch to the MainViewController. Hence, override func viewWillAppear(_ animated: Bool) { if let navController = navigationController as? UINavigationController { let mainViewController = (navController.viewControllers.last as? UINavigationController)?.viewControllers.last as? UIViewController if let mainViewController = mainViewController { mainViewController.dismiss(animated: true, completion: nil) self.navigationController?.popToRootViewController(animated: true) } } } This should work. The beta-arrestin
