Paramedics in San Bernardino County, California, arrested three county employees for driving under the influence in November. The California Highway Patrol arrested a sheriff's sergeant, a deputy and a dispatch sergeant. In January, a hospital paramedic in San Bernardino County, California, crashed into a vehicle while carrying patients, according to local media. The dispatcher, who was driving the ambulance, was "riding the brakes" and texting when she lost control of the vehicle, a report states. She crashed into a van and broke down on a roadway. The woman was not charged because the vehicle was not traveling in the roadway, the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department told local media. A paramedic in the county had been arrested for DUI in 2012, ABC 7 Los Angeles reported in January. The ambulance called in a "red light violation" to the California Highway Patrol in 2015, and the officer was able to recover a camera video showing the man driving the ambulance through the red light, ABC 7 Los Angeles reported. In November, a private ambulance was involved in a collision with a county SUV that carried four people. The driver crashed into a cement wall on the side of the road, but none of the occupants were seriously injured, according to the report. The San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department noted in the report that local media had failed to take into account the fact that the incident occurred on a highway and that the ambulances were not assigned to county paramedics, the station reported. The ambulance's
