What's New In?

Energy Energy Energy Energy You will notice in the reports of steel pricing that I have fallen back a bit from my previous trade levels and it may seem as though I have stopped my plays at the point of the all-time highs. I know that that is not the case as can be seen in my commentary where I was calling for a pullback from my highs. Since reaching the all-time highs for the series of trade levels I have continued to trade, but as it began to be obvious to me that we were going to have a slow grind up to these levels I began to hedge my strategies and pull back from my highs to sustain gains in cash and take advantage of the small pullbacks that presented themselves. As of now I am bullish on Stet, just as I was bullish on WMB when I had originally recommended it last winter. I personally think the shares are coming back from its bear market low because of the accumulation of bullish opinions as shown in the increasing number of filings for new shares. I have not seen as many filings on this level for the last year, but since announcing my accumulation buy recommendations the number has been steadily increasing, and we are now seeing some new companies announcing plans to float. I really like this recent trend and it would seem to be in direct opposition to the extremely negative news about the Chinese economy as it appears they are really finally taking their hand off of the reins and trying to do something constructive. The most recent earnings from CBIS are what has caused me to reassess the way I am evaluating this dip and have definitely raised the question mark over the value of this dip. You see I do not see any urgent need to accumulate in this stock at this time. It does appear as though we are just trimming the string in the hopes that the stock can find its way back into the post-election rally that is expected to have its day by Christmas. The company has had three quarters in a row of declining earnings, but it has been the earnings as well as the stock that have been going down. On a forward earnings basis this stock looks cheap, but if one takes a look at the quarterly reports of the last few months they show an acquisition of a mining company, some failed acquisition plans and some acquisitions that were plainly successful. The company has added a trucking company in its last two quarters and has been trying to acquire a company that makes graphite electrodes, which, at least in my opinion, should help to stabilize the price
