Username: Q: Sort a list of pairs by values of one of its members I have a list of tuples that contains two floats, and would like to sort it by the last element of the pair. The list looks like this: >>> mylist = [(5, 11), (1, 7), (7, 1), (2, 5), (1, 2)] If I try mylist.sort(key=lambda x: x[1]) it does not work since it is interpreted as the function (lambda x: x[1]) instead of (lambda x: x[1]) Is there a pythonic way to sort a list of pairs by the last element of the second member of the pairs (the same way that you would sort a list of tuples by its first element)? A: Try mylist.sort(key=lambda x: (x[1], x[0])) You can also specify the function for the sort, which will make it that specific object passed in: mylist.sort(key=lambda x: (x[1], x[0])) Acknowledgements {#s8} ===== The study was financed by the Youth Science and Technology Innovation Platform of Jilin Province (20140602024YY).
