The NYPD has just filed for bankruptcy, due to a scandal involving the city's largest police department. After two months of investigating allegations of corruption and overspending within their security firm, the New York Police Department has decided to fire the company's CEO and several board members as well as the security firm itself. The scandal, which began in February when the New York City Comptroller issued a report finding that the NYPD had failed to properly oversee security expenses, has prompted many questions and criticism, including whether the oversight was done on purpose as a means of diverting attention from issues of the NYPD's own internal corruption. The fired CEO
