zbar has been used to create several powerful projects in image recognition and object detection. Do you want a simple but powerful software for image and object recognition, like zbar? Here is a program which you can download for free of charge from the author's homepage. zbar is an open source image and object recognition and object detection software which was developed by Martin Rechberger. It has been used in several universities and research projects for object recognition, object detection, object segmentation, shape analysis and image manipulation. zbar is well optimized to run on even old computers and is able to open many image files. It can handle more than 160 different image types. It supports DICOM images as well as a large selection of recognized formats. The latest version of zbar supports many object types like text, special shapes, colors and faces. In addition, zbar has a preloaded database which can recognize special shapes and objects, such as bottles, cars, cats, dogs, houses and so on. zbar is able to determine the orientation of pictures. It is also possible to automate picture selection with zbar. You can control the software with the cursor keys and it has even an integrated mouse driver. You can use any combination of the 24 buttons to execute predefined actions. #### What's New In Picture Quality Reducer?

This is not so complicated to use as most similar applications. You can collect the pictures to process by dragging them to the bin. The number of pictures that you process will be determined by the parameters that you set, not the total number in the bin. The processes are queued and started in order. Highlight: It works with all JPEG (or just certain types of them) files. You can start from importing the pictures, or just to set the parameters for a batch process. You can view the details of each imported image (name, date, size, resolution, dimension, and bit depth) We found that the quality of the pictures is not always reduced by the quality setting. There was a case where a couple of pictures we imported took after reducing the quality 75% – 105%. I think the price needs to be raised. If you want to reduce a few pictures, you will probably not pay $30-$40 for it. Not enough. If you want to reduce all the pictures in a folder for free, you can either use Photoshop (not recommended for any photographer) or use a Free Open Source software like Picasa or Gimp. Udhayam said: The idea is to reduce the quality by half, but it seems to be working only with 20% (or 25%). And some pictures, like me, have no problem. D.V. said: He is right, there are two modes, one reduces the quality by 50%, the other reduces it by 75%. He is more likely to get the 50% one than the 75% one. The best way is to save them all, if they were already high quality pictures, just send to trash. I used to use this software for reducing the image quality, it works really good, its easy to use. But i have a small problem, when i use the software and want to close it it gets stuck with opening the folder and when i manually close it it works fine, i am really stuck, can anyone please help me out. Thanks. I use this software all the time. I have a Macbook. I downloaded a version of 7zip that had the program in the archive. I opened the archive and the program was included. I then extracted the zip file on my MacBook. The program worked just fine.
