The problem may be formulated like this: Given a list  $[1, 2, 3]$  and a natural number  $k$ , find all  $m$  such that the number of permutations of  $m$  elements among  $k$  is  $k!$ . We can of course brute-force approach it like this: for  $(m=k; m>0; m=m-1)$  do if  $k+m*(k+1)/2-k >= m$  then print  $m$  end end We can reduce the number of generated permutations by splitting the list and partitioning into parts of size  $m$ . It seems that an exponential algorithm is required (there is the worst-case algorithm). The problem I have is: Can this be solved faster than finding all orderings? Can a much smarter algorithm be found? For example, maybe
