Cummings Otolaryngology, 6e by Elsevier Medical Books 5 years ago 1 minute, 32 seconds 653 views Preview: "The Sixth Edition of Cummings Otolaryngology provides unparalleled guidance for head and neck surgery..Sir, I read with interest the article written by Seo et al.\[[@ref1]\] on the value of positron emission tomography and computerized tomography (PET/CT) in evaluating histopathology of cervical lymph nodes. The authors have concluded that PET/CT can effectively complement histopathological examination. The major strength of this article is the testing and validation of the PET/CT and histopathological examinations on cadaveric human lymph nodes.

The limitation of this article is that it only focused on detecting metastasis of cervical lymph nodes. The other important limitation of the paper is that most of the groups are small in sample sizes. A study to define the role of PET/CT in the management of Hodgkin and non-Hodgkin lymphoma is required. Financial support and sponsorship {#sec2-1}

==== Nil. Conflicts of interest {#sec2-2} ===== There are no conflicts of interest. Q: "Genetic algorithm" (GA) and "genetic programming" (GP) Is there something that makes GP and GA different? On Wikipedia it says GP uses such problems as spatial 5-solve or music tune-up. What are these? Why GP? What do they have in common? A: The term 'genetic algorithm' (which includes genetic programming) is used to describe the process of mimicking the operation of natural biological evolution through selection and recombination. (You can read more about genetic algorithms on Wikipedia). That is because some of the structures of evolution share many similarities with the process of natural biological evolution. At a basic level the probability of reproduction for a given organism depends on its fitness, 3e33713323
