We tried to install Microsoft Express Tools 9.0.1408.17485 in Windows 10. Unfortunately, it crashes when starting the installation process. The three-time Main Event champion, who won his most recent title in February, next appears in a World Series of Fighting headliner at WSOF 23 against Jason Radford on Aug. 5 in Edmonton. But when he returns to Octagon, it will be against a different opponent, as Till will have a UFC contract when he returns to the promotion in October. "I already have a fight lined up," Till told Sherdog.com. "I don't have the card yet, but I will, I'm working on it." Till, an American Top Team member, is 5-1 since joining the UFC. His only loss was a decision loss to Marcus Davis at UFC on FOX 18. That fight was eventually changed to a No Contest. "I'm pretty sure that I have my opponent lined up already," Till said. Till has been inactive since that loss. In his last bout, he dropped a unanimous decision to Ben Rothwell in a battle for the UFC's interim middleweight championship. "I had some surgeries I had to have, just general stuff, and it's been a while since I fought," he said. "I was in the weight room and in the training camp when I got the call. My promoter said 'let's do it.'" Till said he never had any issues with Rothwell or the UFC. However, he said it was in his best interest to fight for a better contract when he returns to the UFC. "Because of the way contracts work in the UFC, you have to fight three fights in a row to get the best contract," he said. "I didn't like the fight I fought, and there's no hard feelings between me and the UFC. But he told me he'd make me a top-20 guy, and he did." Till said the UFC had told him they had plans to make him a top-20 welterweight following his run in the WSOF. "I'm not sure what that means," he said. "They were supposed to have a list ready by the first of the year, and I never got one. But I'm working on it, and I do believe I deserve a good contract. I have to work my way there."
