This included the CAD drawings and notes that came from architects, construction management, suppliers, and inspectors. I had a rough plan of what was going to be built and wanted to keep track of changes as I made them. Creating and linking an information layer to a drawing was the perfect way for me to organize the information, and I wanted to share it with others involved in the project, so I could all work together more easily. I created the new blueprinting feature to solve this problem." — Joe Weslock Gaining visibility into the collaborative history of your drawings allows you to search for previous information in the system.
