As a calcineurin inhibitor, it functions as a potent immunosuppressive agent that inhibits the lymphocyte-mediated production of interleukin-2, interleukin-4, and interleukin-5. The most common manifestation of cyclosporine toxicity is nephrotoxicity. Because patients taking cyclosporine are predisposed to nephrotoxicity, cautious use of this drug is required. Other toxicities include an increased risk of acute graft rejection, especially when combined with other immunosuppressant agents, and hypertension. Cyclosporine is used in 2 forms: the parent drug, cyclosporine, and the prophylactic agent, Neoral. The drug is equally effective in treating rheumatoid arthritis and is used as induction therapy in recipients of solid organ transplants.The long-term effect of a single dose of bupropion on prolactin levels in women.
