It's built on top of qtella for instant notifications. After downloading the latest version of 8hands you can install it by typing in your terminal: `yum install 8hands` will then be installed in your home directory under `~/8hands`. You can also use the following command: `yum install -y 8hands` To use the service, add the following line in your `rc.conf` file located in `/etc/rc.d/`. Make sure that 8hands is the last plugin to be loaded. `8hands_enable="1"` Run the following command to start 8hands: `service start 8hands` To stop 8hands, use the following command: `service stop 8hands` To reload the settings file, just type in your terminal: `service reload 8hands` If you want to use your GNOME desktop to organize your profiles, you can use this command to start and stop 8hands: `service --status-all | grep 8hands` Or you can search for it in the console. YUM also allows you to install the 8hands man page. More information is available at: The system setting on the 8hands Properties page will allow you to add friends and other users of your choice on the platform. If you would like to learn more about configuring services on your Fedora system, please visit Keyboard Shortcuts When 8hands is installed, you can bind keyboard shortcuts to perform different actions using the Set Button Shortcuts option. I've set two keyboard shortcuts to show my friends' profiles and posts. Use the F1 key to toggle the keyboard shortcuts on and off. You can also use a keyboard shortcut to open your settings menu. Pressing the F2 key takes you to your settings menu on the right side panel
