What's New In?

Andy's FLV Joiner is a simple tool that can merge two or more FLV files. This software doesn't require any installation and it runs like a portable product. Moreover, your Windows registry entries are not affected in any way. The user interface of the application is plain and simple. It consists of a window in which you add files to the queue (the "drag and drop" method is supported), select the output destination and name, and initiate the merging process. In the queue, you can view the file name, time, video type, audio encoder and dimensions. Two buttons allow you to move up and down, and you can also view additional details on each FLV file (file path, duration, file size, video stream codec and dimensions, audio stream codec, sample rate and size, channels). Before joining the files, you can also check out the total time and file size of the output FLV video, and list joints. A task is completed in little time, even in the case of larger FLV files, and Andy's FLV Joiner manages to keep a good image and sound quality. The program uses a very low amount of system CPU and memory. It doesn't contain any advanced settings (like giving you the possibility to configure the video size or aspect ratio) or any kind of user documentation, but that's because the software is simple to use even by individuals with no video editing experience. All in all, Andy's FLV Joiner has been designed as a simple tool for merging two or more FLV videos and it does a smooth job. We strongly recommend it to all users. The Internet Advertising Bureau (IAB) has just announced the results of the IAB's first-ever Global AdExpo, which saw 3,500 brands, agencies, retailers and publishers join forces to learn more about the new age of media – a new, new world for the industry. The IAB held its inaugural Global AdExpo this year, bringing together leading brands, advertising agencies, retailers, publishers and media for two days of collaborative sessions, presentations, workshops and discussions around the future of digital advertising. Brand Managers from the world's leading global brands, Chief Digital Officer from the world's leading digital ad agency and retailers' marketing leaders shared how they are using digital to transform their business. The event also saw leading industry experts outline the roadmap for how the industry should navigate its new digital future, including a massive groundswell of digital consumers that are demanding more interaction and control. More than 9,600 attendees from 108 countries around the world attended the event, with 140 sessions, over 80 workshops and a host of networking opportunities. Peter Kent, CEO.
