A: Adobe After Effects Cc 2014 Serial Number is from freeware. Q: JPA method returning wrong database name I am using Netbeans for Java EE development and I am using MySQL as my database engine. I am using some helper methods to return the correct db name for my queries. This works fine and all the queries are fine until I run one query on my table that has the name "myTable". As the documentation describes, JPA queries return data from the "default system database", but in my case, the value is the one that I set in the persistence.xml. How can I make sure that my queries returns data from the database I have my EntityManager pointing at? Example code @Repository public class SomeEntityManagerRepo { public EntityManager em; @PersistenceContext protected EntityManager entityManager() { return em; } public String getMyTableFromQuery() throws ClassNotFoundException, SQLException { EntityManager entityManager = getEntityManager(); Query query = getEntityManager().createQuery("SELECT * FROM SomeTable s WHERE 1 = 1"); List results = query.getResultList(); return results.get(0).getDbname(); } public void saveMyTable() { getEntityManager().getTransaction().begin(); try { getEntityManager().getTransaction().commit(); } finally { getEntityManager().getTransaction().rollback(); } } } Why does SomeTable s have the string "test" stored as "myTable
