colorectal cancer and pregnancy is a rare event. Our purpose was to review the literature regarding this subject. The incidence of colorectal cancer during pregnancy is 1:25,000 to 1:35,000. In most of the reported cases, the tumor is diagnosed during the second half of the third trimester. Clinical manifestations are related to high blood pressure. Total surgical resection is usually recommended, and it has fewer complications than other procedures. Overall, prognosis in pregnancy remains good and the prognosis of the tumor is better than in non pregnant women. There are also more favorable outcomes with hepatic and distal colonic lesions. The incidence of second tumors in these patients has been reported
