As you can see the HTML links inside the sentences that contain `%%variable%%` will be replaced in the script by the value of variable. What I would like to do is to get what I'm clicking in the page, instead of actually clicking on it. I have been trying to use regexp for this purpose, but I didn't succeed. `(function($){ $.fn.parseRegex = function() { var regex = '%%(.)%%', pattern = new RegExp(regex); this.each(function() { var match, className = $(this).data('name'); if (className) { match = pattern.exec(className); if (match) { $(this).addClass(match[1]); } } }); return this; });})(jQuery);` `$('.a').parseRegex();` Is that possible? A: you should be able to use `$.fn.parseRegex = function() { var regex = /%%(.)%%/, pattern = new RegExp(regex); return this.each(function() { var match, className = $(this).data('name'); if (className) { match = pattern.exec(className); if (match) { $(this).addClass(match[1]);`
