Following a quick setup operation that shouldn't give you any trouble, you're welcomed by a single window that displays three options accompanied by checkboxes and descriptions. It's possible to disable the MS-DOS Command Prompt, single mode MS-DOS applications from within the Windows shell as well as the function keys (F5, F6, F8) on system boot. The last mentioned options affects all PC users. However, it's necessary to restart the computer in order to apply the new modifications, otherwise this won't work. If you don't want your computer to show the command prompt on system startup and are comfortable with a more simplistic solution, then the best security software for Windows is ABC Security Protector. I have been using ABC Security Protector for the last four years and I have been very satisfied with the software. ABC Security Protector can run in a trial version for a period of time and even in an automated installation mode that would basically set up your system for ABC Security Protector to run as an active program. As I said, ABC Security Protector will allow you to change the settings of the Command Prompt, single mode MS-DOS programs, the function keys (F5, F6, F8) on system startup and protect your computer with a password. Let's see what changes the software will make when activated, you can then decide if they are a good idea: ABC Security Protector: Basic features ABC Security Protector is a security program and as such it does many things, but probably the most critical ones is that it disables some options that can be used by malware agents in order to get into your system. Disabling the MS-DOS Command Prompt One of the most frequent and most dangerous options for an attacker is the command prompt. The command prompt is the window where you'll type some commands to do things that the malware won't do directly. For example, the malware would use the command prompt to gather information about the system, it would use it to upload files to a remote server, and it would use it to accept commands from remote users. If you don't want your command prompt to appear on boot, you need to create a new user account and access the account with a command prompt disabled. However, if you set up a new account, it will also be possible for the malware to use it and you will need to create a new account for your regular user account. This obviously means that you need to change the password of the normal account, but doing so is relatively easy. Using Single Mode MS-DOS Applications Another very frequent practice by malware agents is to use single mode MS-DOS applications. They do so to access devices, files and other resources that can be accessed only from the DOS shell. If you want to avoid that the malware has access to single mode applications you need to change the programs that run with the single mode application bit. Of course, you should make sure that no new applications start with the single mode bit set. Protecting the Function Keys Another critical

Introduction This review covers the powerful but simple PC game that we just had a look at at first here and was released on July 31st as part of Steam's Summer Sale. The game offers an amazing concept where the town of Shikoku is a cut-down version of the real Shikoku with limited functionality and at the same time provides a much more detailed and interactive world. The game presents you with a series of quests and tasks that you must complete to progress in the story. By default, these tasks can be done in sequence but if you want, you can also
