Towards the end of the third season of our ongoing series about the Republican Party, we examine what the candidates themselves have to say about their own party. For our next installment, we turn to Kentucky's Attorney General, Andy Beshear. "I feel that the Kentucky Republican Party is so isolated from the rest of the political world that they don't really appreciate what it means to be a part of the Republican Party. I think they just don't get it. I think they don't even have a clue what it is. And the reason I say that is because you have to be a Republican to be the Attorney General of Kentucky. The Attorney General is a Republican in Kentucky and the Republican Party needs to get better at telling people that." Since winning the November 2018 election, Beshear has been speaking out about the state of the GOP from the vantage point of his office. He believes Kentucky has some work to do in order to heal some deep wounds, and that the party itself needs to take a look at some fundamental issues. And one area where he says there is a lot of work to do is in outreach to minority communities. "The Republican Party lost the African American vote in this state and, quite frankly, around the country," he said. "So they need to make sure that they get that message right. And the message right now is not just that African Americans are not supporting the Republican Party." He points to Kentucky's lieutenant governor, Jefferson County's incumbent, Judge-Executive John Cessna, who won election as an Independent. "There's no doubt that he did

Pasta Crack + With Key

You can configure your keypresses with the macro editor, define hotkeys, and apply it to almost any program. In a world where people are always at home and easily come across gadgets and technology, it's hard to believe that some people remain in the dark ages. Or maybe they are simply better off not being a part of the technology revolution. Either way, there is no better way to bring your family together than with a project that is powered by computers and the internet. Thus, the family computer tree was born, which provides a number of benefits for families and parents. To begin with, the computer tree can be used as a tool for parents to set a good example for their children about the benefits of technology. Thus, they can teach children to work on computers and to set up their own email accounts, all without having to give in to the fact that the world of computers is scary. In addition, the computer tree is a great way for parents to spend time together with their children, even when they are not able to. Sure, parents can do all sorts of things when they are not spending time with their children. However, when they have a tree to interact with, they can end up talking about other things that are more interesting to them, such as the projects they are working on, a movie they saw or even the book they read. Yet, there are some challenges that face parents who are trying to set up a computer tree. How do you get the computer tree started? For starters, how do you actually know which family member will want to use the computer? And which is the best software solution for computer trees? Thankfully, the aforementioned questions have all been solved by a family-friendly app named "Family Tree". This app is not only easy to use, but it also lets you set up, create, and share family trees with friends, families, and strangers. You can upload your family tree to an online or local location and share it with others. In fact, you can even start your own family tree, where you can add your kids, your parents, and even your relatives. If that's not enough, the app also enables you to categorize family members, establish who is the alpha and omega of a tree, and send greetings and invitations to them. Another great feature of Family Tree is that you can share your computer tree with other Family Tree users. 1d6a3396d6

Pixton introduced the case as the plaintiff was to begin his argument. "Good morning, Gentlemen of the Jury. At the conclusion of the previous argument of my counsel, I had pointed out that I had an absolute right to protect my client and to cause such protection to be effected by any and every method, short of violence. But the defendant has asked me if I will make that claim under the law. If I do, I must pay for the privilege of asserting it." The Colonel then turned to the Attorney General and inquired of him if he had authority to represent the government in the matter. The Attorney General admitted that he had no such authority but that he had been instructed to appear on behalf of the government by the President. "In that event," said the Colonel, "I have the plainest authority to enforce my client's rights by any and all means which I see fit. I do not wish to insult the intelligence of my fellow citizens by stating that I could purchase a few detectives and have them obtain service of this citation upon the defendant. I am not about to do so. This defendant is well known to me, and I have already served him at the Headquarters of the town in which he lives. I am perfectly aware of the difficulty of serving him in this part of the State, and the added difficulty of prosecuting him in my own home." The Colonel then turned to the Attorney General and asked if he had any evidence to offer on the part of the defendant in the case. "I have not yet offered any, sir," he said. "Very well, then," said the Colonel, "my own case is simple. All
