The question of how this education is acquired presents some challenges. It is widely accepted that those who achieve their position through university research and PhD research have particular skills and knowledge. Yet history teachers who came up in schools generally say that they do not specialise. Indeed, a senior History teacher confirmed that when he speaks of history, his basic education was in mathematics and that this was the training that brought him to his current position. This raises the question of how much education teachers acquire in school classes. One senior member of the Association of Educational Leaders believes that teachers should take a minimum of one year of a history of a subject at university and have gained skills in research. However, he went on to say that many teachers are unqualified to undertake such research and that all he needs to do is to accept that the quality of history teaching is usually the work of 09e8f5149f

I have added a button and on tap, I want to change the color of the selected button to blue as in the attached image. I am adding the button programmatically, so I changed the tint color of the button in IB. In the IB, when the button is tapped, the tint color changes to blue (as shown in the image). But programmatically, the tint color is not changing. Is there a way to achieve this? Setting selected state for the button: self.buttonSetting.setTitleColor(UIColor.green, for:.normal) self.buttonSetting.setTitleColor(UIColor.blue, for:.selected) self.buttonSetting.selected = true Output: A: The tint color is changed after the button is tapped. But, you are setting selected state in buttonSetting property. And, the selected state will not be changed until now. So, the selected state doesn't have effect. To achieve this, you need to set the selected property of your button in your viewDidLoad and release the button in viewWillDisappear. If you are using Xcode, then you can do it in the Interface Builder. Just connect your button outlet to the button in your viewDidLoad and set the property in your viewWillDisappear. If you are not using X
