targeting of 3beta-sulfooxysterols to phagosomes. Many essential physiological processes such as leukocyte activation and phagocytosis require lipid rafts. Lipid rafts are dynamic membrane microdomains with detergent-resistant associations of sphingolipids, glycosphingolipids, cholesterol, and proteins. Following phagocytosis, specialized phagosomes become extremely enriched in lipid raft proteins and cholesterol. To gain further insight into lipid rafts in phagosomes, we set out to selectively target proteins to these subcellular compartments. For this purpose, we utilized a variety of lipid-anchored, membrane-bound, and soluble proteins and measured their subcellular localization using electron microscopy and fluorescence microscopy. In experiments with the protein Transferrin receptor (TfR), we showed that phagosomes fuse with the plasma membrane and that it partially recycles back into the plasma membrane. In addition, TfR was found in lipid raft-like microdomains in the plasma membrane. Finally, 54b84cb42d
