For non-heavyweights, this has worked well over the last decade. For the slightly overweight, it's over, as a mechanism for calculating something like fixed cost rates. For the really overweight, it's over, as a mechanism for not trying to be their friend. But for the extra-moderately overweight, can I use this BMR to calculate a flat rate? Or, am I leaving the best part out of my BMR calculations? A: Even for the moderately overweight, a fixed fee might not be appropriate. There are a lot of different factors involved, besides the numbers, like strength, habits, and body composition. For that reason, the fixed fee is best used for the very, very overweight. Even then, it
