Trapcode Echospace is a powerful animation controller for Adobe After Effects. It provides a state machine for handling many different steps. A feature that stands out is that it has many adjustable parameters. For instance, you can create a transition from one mask to another one with a different alpha channel. The same goes for transitions from one color to another. What can you do with Trapcode Echospace? You can use it to create all kinds of transitions for any kind of object. Be it color changes or any other kind of transition. In this demo I will show you the possibilities you can use to create an animated color change effect on a layer. For this purpose we will use Trapcode Echospace. How to install Trapcode Echospace? Download the plugin here: Trapcode Echospace. As you can see, it is a plugin for After Effects CS5 and higher. How to use Trapcode Echospace? In this tutorial, we will use the Trapcode Echospace. But before you can get started, you should install it. First, open the Trapcode Echospace plugin. 2. You will find two tabs at the top. The first one shows all transitions. The second one is for advanced settings. 3. If you choose advanced settings you can set the following parameters. • Use this shortcut to change the active tool. Pressing ESC will change to the next tool. • Use this shortcut to change the colors between which the transition will be made. You can select a color, a color range, or even a color gradient. • Change the transition time. 4. Next, we will create the first transition. Choose a tool and in the tool options set the color to pink. Set the time to 3 seconds. And set the location to 100%. 5. Now we will start the transition. You can see that the layer is no longer pink but that the mask looks like a solid pink color. 6. By pressing the SPACEBAR you can select the available transition options. In the next screen, you can change the color of the layer by clicking on the desired color. 7. In the third screen you can change the colors of the text. 8. To exit the process, press ESC.
