ClassA holds a name and a list of classB. ClassB holds a name and a list of classA. ClassA: public class MyClassA { public string Name { get; set; } public List ClassBList { get; set; } } ClassB: public class MyClassB { public string Name { get; set; } public List ClassAList { get; set; } } I need to make a function that gets two objects of the classA and classB and do stuff to both of them. How do I do this? This isn't the exact question but hopefully it helps anyway. A: Create an interface with a matching function definition: public interface IAmStuff { void Stuff(); } public class ClassA : IAmStuff { public string Name { get; set; } public List ClassBList { get; set; } } public class ClassB : IAmStuff { public string Name { get; set; } public List ClassAList { get; set; } } Then when you need to do something with both, you just need to work on both classes that implement the interface: IAmStuff x = new ClassA(); IAmStuff y = new ClassB(); x.Stuff(); y.Stuff(); Does that make sense? You could rename the list property to something else (like Description), but I've left it as is. The port of the U.S. Atlantic Fleet based in Norfolk, Virginia, is located about a mile (1.6 kilometers) south of the port of Hampton Roads, Virginia. The main entry channel for ships is a long, natural bay indenting the coast of Norfolk
