The latest update to Firefox includes a bunch of new features, including a new Startpage and a new Searchbar, among many others, and of course still the great support for add-on makers. Firefox 19.0a1 is now available as a beta for Windows, Linux and Mac. Mozilla's newest major release of the Firefox web browser includes several improvements and new features. It also includes a new 'Startpage' feature, which gives users the ability to customize their preferred search engine, and two-factor authentication, which is designed to bolster privacy. There's even a new browser for Android users. The latest version of Firefox lets you adjust the window size on a per-website basis. From there, you can resize the window, making it easier to fit more sites in a single window. Firefox 19 adds a handful of other improvements: a new 'Stay On Top' add-on, which lets users select an individual page to keep it out of the way when other pages are viewed, a 'Preferences...' button, and a less-cluttered interface. If you want to make changes to your Firefox settings, now there's a single button where you can make those changes in one place. After all, Firefox settings are confusing and it can be difficult to know where to make your changes. Firefox 19.0a1 also introduces a new tab view that makes it easier to organize all of your tabs. For security reasons, Mozilla is sending all users who sign in to the Firefox Market Place a one-time cookie that will expire in seven days. For more details, you can download Firefox 19 from Mozilla or check out the official blog post for a complete changelog. Of course, if you already use Firefox on the desktop, you can get the latest version of the browser right from the website.]]> …. 🎁�
