Color consistency within an image or a large collection of images. Can some maintain a consistent tone from image to image while others vary? What's the best way to achieve this effect? Saving images Taking advantage of the exceptional color correction engine that is baked into Photoshop, its screen counterpart, Photoshop for iOS, offers a comprehensive way for users to control the way that images get saved. Image quality with the support of easy-to-use controls As for the image quality controls, the app comes with a collection of four presets, namely Best, Standard, Vivid and Natural. Best is meant for those who want the most accurate representation of a photo, and as the name suggests, this setting applies saturation enhancement to the image to achieve the most accurate representation. Standard is for users who want to avoid the risk of removing details that could add an extra depth of perception to the final photo, as well as to achieve a decent level of color reproduction. Vivid is meant for those who want to avoid fading tones in the image. Natural, which means "natural", in this case, is for those who want to retain the color tones as much as possible. Once you have selected the desired settings, you can also adjust the image sharpness using the in-built sharpness controls. Saving images with the help of presets Saving images is a lot easier with Photoshop for iOS. By selecting one of the four presets, you will be able to adjust the image sharpness, level of saturation, exposure, white balance and detail. When it comes to choosing the desired settings, you can change them to the desired values, and as the image is saved, it will adjust the specific settings to the new values. When it comes to more complex scenarios, such as the export of images to different platforms, you can access the "Save for Web/App" panel, which makes it easier to export images from Photoshop for iOS. Exporting images to other platforms One of the key features of Photoshop for iOS is the ability to export images to Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest, Instagram, Apple News, Dropbox, Google Drive, and OneDrive.
