Warning Be careful when working with layers or groups. If you want to retain the original contents of one image, don't use a layer or group. You can always make a new layer or group and move or copy the original layer or group to the new layer or group. Often, when you open a document, Photoshop asks you what you want to do, and you may select either Rename or Open. The Open option opens the document directly as a new file, whereas the Rename option allows you to change the name of the document or file. Some libraries are organized so that each user is given a folder to work on. In this case, it's always best to use the Open option to make sure that the image you open is exactly the one that you want. After you open a document, you have only a few seconds to decide how you want to save the document. Don't bother about other features at the time. You can open the Save As dialog box later, after you work on the document. If you're going to use a new image for any reason, do a File → New to create a new document to start from. Every program has a button that saves the document before closing. This button is commonly called the `_Close_` button. You can always choose Close at the top of the screen to save your document. Figure 2-6 shows the Close button as well as the small icon in the upper-left corner. You use this icon to close the program and return to a program's title bar. FIGURE 2-6: The icon in the upper-left corner closes the program when you click it. * * * #

Using the Save As dialog box Photoshop provides an easy method for saving files in the Edit menu. Choose the Save As dialog box that appears. Select a destination that you want to save the file to, such as a folder on your computer's hard drive or on a CD. The next step is to specify a name for the file, such as ``NYTimes_affiliate_logo.jpg``. Click Save to save the new image to the selected location. Figure 2-7 shows the Save As dialog box. FIGURE 2-7: Save the document in this easy-to-use dialog box. An investigation of the potential for developing the next generation of drugs for treating CNS disorders has confirmed most of the intellectual property from our current portfolio of drug candidates. After four years of study in the Wistar Institute's CF-3Toxicol™ Small Molecule Screening Facility we have identified over 70 lead compounds with anthelmintic and antiparasitic potentials. The screen has been focused on compounds with potential anti-trypanosomal activity, however we have also performed similar screens for the parasitic diseases leishmaniasis, African sleeping sickness and Chagas disease. In addition, some of the compounds identified from this screen have been evaluated for their potential as antimalarials.
