Send a Web Request works in the following way: it first receives the URL from a clipboard or from a file. This allows you to select from different URLs and access sites from any computer with Internet access. The tool then collects all of the necessary information (fields, headers and cookies) from the selected URL, and sends a Web request to that site, and then displays the results. This freeware is not only useful to access websites without a connection, but it also allows you to run online applications and download files from the Internet. SmartMount is an application that turns the files on your PC, into a virtual drive and allows them to be accessed like any other drives on your PC. It does this through implementing a driver for your virtual drive (in this case a CD-ROM), and another driver for your preferred device. Once the application is installed and running, SmartMount opens a menu which allows you to add your preferred CD-ROM to the virtual drive and access files stored on the CD-ROM with the same ease as any other drive on your PC. You can easily move files between your virtual drive and other drives on your PC by using drag and drop, by marking a file in the virtual drive as a favorite, and by burning content to the virtual drive. TPConfig is a free application that lets you keep track of all the settings of your Windows installations, as well as your network settings and IP addresses. The software has a set of wizards that allow you to quickly create a new entry 1d6a3396d6

Nevron Workspace was designed with an extended version of the Nevron Dockable Group. All the menus are on the top of the application window, therefore the workspaces are more responsive and easy to use. A workspace is composed of several frames. A workspace can be either horizontal or vertical, however, horizontal workspaces are highly recommended. A horizontal workspace is more compact than a vertical workspace. Horizontal workspaces have very small titles, which are not noticeable. A vertical workspace does not take up that much space, yet there are large titles, which may be helpful when displaying the workspace. In horizontal workspaces, the title bar may be used to create a short menu. Users can drag the borders between the frames to easily organize their workspace. Dragging the title bar, in either direction, will resize the entire workspace. The user can also double-click the title bar to set the default workspace size. If the user chooses to change the default frame size, the default frame width is set to 105% of the title bar width. The default frame height is set to 70% of the title bar height. Shrinking a workspace is not possible. To create a new workspace, simply click the Create button on the title bar. When a workspace is double-clicked, it will open. If the user does not want to open a workspace, they can always double-click the title bar to open it, or simply drag the workspace to a new location.

Frames The frames are the columns of a workspace. When the user clicks the title bar of a frame, it will open the frame in a split screen. The default frame width is 105% of the title bar width. There are 2 types of frames. The default frame type: it is the frame that opens when the user clicks the title bar. The default frame type can be modified using the Workspaces dialog box. The sidebar frame: it is the frame that opens when the user clicks the Frame menu. The sidebar frame can be modified using the frame menu.

Frame menu There are a number of options available in the frame menu. The user can choose the border style, change the default frame width, height, spacing, and border color. Frames can be divided into 3 categories. The drag and drop frames: the user can drag the frame from one location to another. When the
