CcPublisher is a simple to use application that does what it says on the tin: It publishes media content to your website, or makes it freely available for hosting, under various licenses. It is a free application that can be used legally by amateurs and professionals alike. CcPublisher automatically applies any number of licenses, and adds them to the content. A short description, helping to make it clear what the application is and what it can do. What I liked about this application is that it is short and to the point. This is great for amateurs that want to publish media content, but don't want to spend the time writing a lengthy description. What I didn't like was that it wasn't entirely free, but I was prepared for this, as the free version of the application is enough for amateurs to use to publish their content. Other programs have to be downloaded, but CcPublisher can be used straight from the browser. The application can only be used from the browser, rather than from a download file. This would provide a much more convenient experience to new users, since they don't have to hunt through the application folder for the executable file. Conclusion CcPublisher is a simple to use application that is easy to use and great for users that want to use publishing media to their website, or make it freely available on the internet. However, if a user wants to extract greater functionality from the program, then they might need to pay for a license. Threshold and implicit thresholds for the detection of consecutive duration series. Three experiments were conducted to investigate the identification of a sequence of durations. The durations were between 10 and 120 msec in length and were presented at an interstimulus interval (ISI) of either 0 or 800 msec. In the first experiment, subjects identified a sequence of sounds that were of the same duration or a sequence of sounds that were of different durations. In the second experiment, subjects identified the same types of sequences as those in Experiment 1 but used a task that was designed to increase the possibility that explicit knowledge of the ISI would be used. In the third experiment, subjects identified the same sequences as those in Experiment 2 using a task designed to minimize the effect of explicit knowledge of the ISI. The results of the studies indicated that both implicit and explicit knowledge of the ISI can be used to make the judgments. Implicit knowledge seemed to predominate in the detection of a sequence of the same duration and explicit knowledge in the detection of a sequence of different durations. Results from Experiment 3 were not so definitive. However, it was clear that the use of the DSIS and ITRIS tasks could alter the information used by subjects in the tasks.
