See the new look, feel and enhanced user experience. Apple graphicsThe effect of age and body size on the pharmacokinetics and pharmacodynamics of alphaxalone. Alphaxalone, a new nonbenzodiazepine general anesthetic, was administered i.v. to 6 adults and 9 infants of varying weight and age in order to determine if the serum elimination rate of alphaxalone was affected by age or body size, as would be expected if the drug were metabolized by a hepatic enzyme. Blood samples were obtained for 8 h after drug administration and assayed for drug concentration by equilibrium dialysis. Changes in the electroencephalogram were used to determine the anesthetic state of the subjects. The calculated total body clearance of alphaxalone was of the order of 2.5 liters/min in adults and 0.6 liters/min in infants, regardless of age or body size. The volume of distribution, Vd, was of the order of 0.65-1.1 liters/kg in adults and 0.06-0.08 liters/kg in infants. These Vd values are several orders of magnitude less than the difference in body weight between adults and infants. The Vd values are consistent with a distribution of alphaxalone throughout extracellular fluid in both adults and infants. In addition, the serum concentration of alphaxalone was not a function of either age or body size in any subject. Thus, it appears that the observed difference in body size between adults and infants does not affect the pharmacokinetics or pharmacodynamics of alphaxalone./* * Copyright 2012 Red Hat Inc. * * Permission is hereby granted, free of charge, to any person obtaining a * copy of this software and associated documentation files (the "Software"), * to deal in the Software without restriction, including without limitation * the rights to use, copy, modify, merge, publish, distribute, sublicense, * and/or sell copies of the Software, and to permit persons to whom the *
