Spatial trends in the occurrence of pseudotumor cerebri in Japan. To elucidate spatial trends in the occurrence of pseudotumor cerebri (PTC) in Japan. We also analyzed the time-dependent change in incidence of PTC and its related factors to determine whether these trends were identical to those in other countries. Using data from the Japan Pediatric Neuro-Ophthalmology Study Group, we conducted a spatial autocorrelation analysis of the occurrence of PTC in Japan. We also analyzed the time-dependent change in PTC incidence, using data from the Japanese Registry for Pediatric Intracranial Hypertension. Data for 1630 pediatric patients were analyzed. The occurrence of PTC seemed to be higher in some urban locales in the country than in other locales. There was a slight reduction in the incidence of PTC in all locales during the 21-year period examined. These trends were similar to those reported in other countries. During the study period, significant differences in baseline characteristics were observed between the non-PTC group and the PTC group. This suggests that the incidence of PTC may be associated with baseline characteristics such as the patient's sex, age, duration of symptoms, and treatment history. Because data on the incidence of PTC in many developed countries are incomplete or lacking, it is difficult to conduct a standard comparison of the incidence of PTC between countries. Spatial autocorrelation analysis showed a higher incidence of PTC in certain locales than in others, providing a possible clue to the epidemiology of PTC in Japan. The time-dependent decrease in the incidence of PTC in Japan was similar to that seen in other countries. When patients with an insufficient database are excluded, these trends are unlikely to be due to the small numbers of cases in rural locales.Q: How to import an existing ipython/ipdb session I am using ipython/ipdb to debug a complex python code. I have written the python code from scratch in a plain python notebook, which is working fine. I want to import the same session into another python notebook to debug it. I tried following the instructions here, but none of the suggestions seem to work. I also tried using the sessionmanager module mentioned here. My

Q: No more connection information available for using Eclipse Oxygen.1a Release (4.7.1a) What are the workarounds for the eclipse no more connection information avialable? I got this issue when I try to run my gradle build. I have the "build-helper-maven-plugin" in my build.gradle. And I have the android-maven-plugin in my android-build.gradle. I also tried to refresh gradle project, but it did not work. Any of you have a solution? A: I was running behind this issue which happened when my network dropped while my gradle sync was active. Finally, I worked it out myself. Just try to kill the gradle process that ran previously. It will run again and it will show you the error. And then try to start it again. Does the threshold of the ferroelectric phase in BaTiO3 exist? First-principles density-functional theory (DFT) calculations of the equation of state of BaTiO3 are reported for a range of volumes. These equations of state are in excellent agreement with a simple model using harmonic elasticity theory. Further work focuses on the isothermal compressibility beta(T) at 2.4 GPa. Calculations of beta(T) in the low-pressure ferroelectric phase show that there is a plateau at 2.5 GPa in the 5K temperature range, from which it follows that the phase transition at 0 K is second order and monoclinic. Here beta(0) is found to be negative, and fits to the model are used to quantify this complex behaviour. Finally, the variation of beta(T) in the paraelectric region is calculated and compared to measurements made above and below the ferroelectric transition by Kröger and Voigt.Add an interesting twist to your CDN delivery.
