What happens when you re-implement basic abstractions like car, cdr, cons, map, filter, etc., in a functional language? It may sound impractical for a number of reasons. First, it may not be clear if you'll write more efficient code. Second, functional languages are often not very good at integrating with objects. So you write a recursive-descent parser and a desugar for Common Lisp. Only to find that nobody believes you. You must have forgotten something. Well, yes. There is always some small flaw. Still, as a learning experience, I found it instructive. Below is a simple ANSI Common Lisp/CMUCL implementation of the rewriter. It is written to be inefficient, though idiomatic in style. It may be an illuminating exercise. CMU CL Welcome to CMU CL. While it may or may not be the one and only Common Lisp, it is a dialect which is very similar to ANSI CL. The compatibility is close enough to make this a fair test. (defpackage "CMU CL" (:use "ANSI CL")) Some utilities clim (CL implementation manager) 648931e174
