Q: Regarding the encoding of HTML tag in web browser My site is having text like "fullscreen" by tag name. If I change the code to "✱ fullscreen" and submit the form, then the web browser does not encode the html code. Why is it so? A: Because meta elements are ignored by browsers. Use instead. You have no control over what browser encodes your HTML. What you can do is to use the HTML tag to set the content type to UTF-8 (see and Why is it so? Because browsers are not required to encode HTML but only URIs and external resources. Why can't we all just get along? 'Tis true, life gets more complicated as we get older, yet somehow, we still manage to retain a sense of understanding and compassion for those around us. I believe that the common folk of their generation share many of the same values that we do, just with a different name. shrugs Back when I was growing up, the term 'hippies' was used to describe young folks who had left behind their families, moving into communes to live as a group. They didn't even bother to own property or legally marry, and although they shared a common belief, it was not uncommon to see them struggling to accept each other's moral code or religion. As I venture a bit further into my current walk of life, I've come to realize how often people can't seem to put away their grudges. Oh, they'
