LogicaÂ . A: There is no `var_dump()` function for the `foreach` loop. It works like this: `foreach($instance_data as $instance_data_key => $instance_data_value){ var_dump($instance_data_key); var_dump($instance_data_value); }` If you're on PHP > 5.4, you could simplify the `foreach` loop to this: `foreach($instance_data as $key => $value){ var_dump($key); var_dump($value); }` But remember, when using `foreach`, the variables you're working on inside the loop, are overridden at the end of the loop. Effects of preoperative anti-HBc levels, preoperative HBeAg status, and HBV viral load on HBsAg level decline after living liver transplantation. A high HBV viral load can lead to less rapid liver regeneration and hepatic function improvement after living donor liver transplantation (LDLT). The preoperative level of HBsAg is positively correlated with HBV viral load and can reflect the need for antiviral therapy. HBeAg-positive patients can usually be treated with antiviral therapy to maintain a HBV viral load of 1000 IU/mL, Group A), medium (100-1000 IU/mL, Group B), and low (≤ 100 IU/mL, Group C) preoperative anti-HBc levels were compared. Time to normalization of total bilirubin levels and albumin levels were compared between three groups. Liver histology was evaluated by the Lanzini classification. The main adverse events after LDLT were neutropenia and biliary tract infection. The rate of preoperative anti-HBc positivity was 9.1%. The mean HBV viral load
