Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of fabricating a metallic capacitor, and more particularly, to a method of fabricating a composite capacitor. 2. Description of the Related Art The operating frequency of an electronic appliance has increased during the evolution of the electronic industry. To accommodate the higher speed operation of the electronic appliance, an integrated circuit (IC) circuit, formed on a substrate, becomes increasingly dense, and more and more signal lines have to be laid in the circuit. Therefore, as the transmission speed of the signal lines in the circuit increases, the transmission loss of the signal lines in the circuit increases and the time required for a signal to travel through the circuit is reduced. For example, with respect to a variable capacitor, the capacitance value of the variable capacitor has to be tuned to an optimum value, and therefore the capacitance of the variable capacitor must be adjusted as the frequency of the signals varies. A conventional variable capacitor is a ceramic capacitor, which has a fixed capacitance value. Due to the high parasitic resistance of a fine metal wire, the tuning precision of the ceramic capacitor is not satisfactory in a high-frequency region. Therefore, the variable capacitor has to be replaced with a variable capacitor having a metal-insulator-metal (MIM) structure. However, because the parasitic resistance of the MIM variable capacitor is much greater than that of the conventional ceramic capacitor, the overall tuning precision of the MIM variable capacitor cannot be improved. Therefore, one object of the present invention is to provide a method of fabricating a composite capacitor, which can be fabricated with a high precision. To achieve these and other advantages and in accordance with the purpose of the invention
