The U.N. General Assembly recently adopted a number of resolutions that further cement China's domination of the world. This is again reflected by the U.N.'s list of Agenda Items for December. Aside from blocking the entry of the U.S., Russia, India, Japan and South Africa, the U.N. also decided to help groups "dictate terms" to India and Pakistan and to propose a new and dangerous role for the world body. The major U.N. resolutions were adopted at the 59th session of the General Assembly in mid-October, including a resolution on "Financial Disclosure," a second resolution on "External Facilitation of Arms Control," and a resolution calling for the creation of "counter-measures" against cyber-attacks. In terms of developing weaponry, China's resolution "to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East" was adopted, as was a resolution on "Wartime Measures to Protect Internally Displaced Persons." Apart from these and other resolutions, many specific resolutions on specific issues were adopted. China's domination of the General Assembly follows its position in the U.N. Security Council, which has been held by China since January 2009. And there is absolutely no doubt that the U.N. resolutions will be followed. For, as we have seen over the years, China has shown time and again that it will be willing to go to any length to get its way at the U.N. and beyond. After the U.S. administration dropped out of the Security Council, China requested that the General Assembly be allowed to establish a full-time "permanent representative" of China to the U.N. The General Assembly has established this position, which is currently held by the Chinese ambassador, Zhang Jun, who has held this position since the beginning of 2012. China's domination at the U.N. clearly took a turn for the worse in the spring of 2011 when the Arab Spring began to unfold. From that time until now, China has been in a war to prevent any and all proposals that would challenge its growing domination at the U.N. Beijing has thus pushed hard in the General Assembly, within the U.N. Security Council and even at the G-20. The U.N. didn't get on top of this in
