M.I.A. Doesn't Give Up on Music, Subs on "Radio" - rshlo ====== pasbesoin I'm not really impressed with this article (at least its' headline). In my view, the "younger" generation -- that is, people under 40 -- seem to be indeed learning a business model of the record company model: Delivering a series of songs to a captive market. See the various failures of a generation ago; the band members (or other possible producers) move on to other business ventures and this marketing circus continues. Whether or not this is a good choice, or just a continued generational transition, is really moot. What is relevant, is that they are marketed and thereby priced. Give me the (1) indie band or (2) indie band with the (3) greatest traction within a region, and I might be a tiny bit more impressed. I can only speak from what I've heard/seen in music. But, again, I'm not impressed. Chris Lynn and Matthew Wade have reportedly returned to Australia with Cricket Australia (CA) facing a crisis in rankings. Australian cricket sources indicated to the ABC on Thursday that the pair will tour India and take part in limited-overs matches only. The move has prompted angry comments from former Australian all-rounder Geoff Lawson, who has been given a role with CA. "What a silly thing," Lawson told AAP at Gabba on Saturday. "What's the [point] of having two spinners in the squad if you only use them on the most artificial, non-cricketing grounds?" "These are highly professional sportspeople, who have been selected to play the game for Australia and will do their very best to stay in the game and get as much exposure as possible. "If that's not possible on tour, that's a decision that [CA] has to make. It might be that there is no point picking them for a few domestic matches. But you keep guys who you think are

On the recognition of foreign bodies. During the period 1986-90, at the Department of Otorhinolaryngology, University Hospital in Gdańsk, a total of 95 foreign bodies were extracted from the human head and neck. The vast majority (90.5%) of these foreign bodies was of a relatively simple type and made of a metallic material. The aim of this paper is to assess the importance of the adhesive properties of a foreign body as a factor affecting the process of its recognition by the patient or by medical personnel and to present the parameters in favour of or against the adhesive properties of a foreign body. A foreign body is considered to be potentially adhesive if the surface of the foreign body has reduced friction. The type of foreign body, if it is made of one material, and the shape, size, location and depth of the foreign body, if it is made of more than one material, must all be taken into account when the characteristics of the foreign body are assessed. Dental prosthesis were analysed in the most detail. The characteristics of the dental prosthesis showed the most pronounced influence on the degree of adhesion. However, the dentist, when he is placing a dental prosthesis in the patient's mouth, is also assessing and taking into account the conditions of the patient's mouth. In situations when the dentist cannot be sure of the adhesive properties of the dental prosthesis, the doctor treating the patient should assess all the relevant parameters of the patient's health, knowledge of the foreign body in question and the patient's ability to recognise the foreign body.The effects of race, country of residence, socio-economic status, and gender on skin ageing. This study examines the multidimensional effects of demographic factors on the development of skin aging by performing a direct comparison of data on skin aging from the United States and England. The study provides evidence for the importance of demographic factors, such as race, socio-economic status, and country of residence, on the amount and distribution of skin aging. The rate of aging of the skin varied significantly between different age groups and ethnic and racial groups in both countries. Skin aging was also found to vary by gender in both countries. In addition, the rate of skin aging varied by socio-economic status in England, but not in the United States. This study also provides evidence for the inappropriateness of the use of the 'chronological' aging paradigm as a way of thinking about aging. The results show that chronological age is an inaccurate predictor of skin aging
