A: This question has been asked before at various degrees. I think your question is really about the difference between a divisor and an effective divisor. The difference between a divisor and an effective divisor is that a divisor is a linear combination of the coefficients of Sx , while an effective divisor is the sum of effective divisors (see Lemma 2.3.8 of my notes). The difference between a divisor and an effective divisor is that a divisor is allowed to have coefficients that are in \mathbb{Z} while an effective divisor is only allowed to have coefficients in \mathbb{N} . When dealing with a degree 2 polynomial $SP(x)$, every coefficient of $SP(x)$ is either 0, 1, or -1, hence we can take $D = P(x)$ to be any effective divisor. Then Eisenstein's Criterion (on the original page here) follows from Lifting Lemma (see Lemma 2.3.4 of my notes). (I hope this is not an elementary mistake. I am not at all good at elementary number theory.) A: Every irreducible polynomial of degree 2 over \mathbb{Q} is a mon
