High resolution FRET biosensor for nanoscale imaging and large scale stimulation of intracellular signaling pathways. Functional analysis of cell signaling requires high resolution nanoscale imaging as well as the ability to stimulate cells with defined biochemical agents. Here, we report two complementary nanodevices that are assembled using the plasmon-enhanced fluorescence resonance energy transfer (PE-FRET) technology as the basis for a versatile biosensor platform for imaging of cell signaling in real time at the nanoscale. The first device is a sophisticated nanoscale fluorescence microscope that delivers to the sample a light spot and a nanoscale sensor that is composed of two plasmonic nanomotors connected by a FRET spacer. Under imaging conditions, the energy transfer efficiency of the two motors is adjusted via a wavelength-dependent FRET efficiency of the spacer, which is the FRET donor, allowing quantitative monitoring of the FRET efficiency at the nanoscale. The second device is a cuvette where a solution of the two nanomotors can be mixed to perform stimulation experiments. Our approach is exemplified in cell signaling assays. We demonstrate that the FRET signal generated by our nanodevices is protein-free, and can thus be considered a pure structural signal in cell signaling. Our systems are also compatible with different molecules including small molecules, peptides, antibodies, nucleic acids, and proteins. They represent a versatile platform for nanoscale imaging and stimulation of cell signaling.Q: How can I perform regex replacement on a string in Python 3? I'm wondering whether there is a way to
