Risk-benefit analysis of commercial satellite-based Automatic Identification System (AIS) for maritime search and rescue application. Satellite-based Automatic Identification System (AIS) has been available for many years. However, the application of AIS in maritime search and rescue (SR) domain has not been widely adopted due to higher requirement of reliability and lower requirement of the search speed. For the search task of maritime SR, this paper considers 3 scenarios of ship trajectory, ship number and the number of ships in the search area, respectively. We also consider the effect of AIS service reliability on the search efficiency. In the first scenario, we find that the 3-dB sidelobe of spread-spectrum AIS technique is around 5 km. In the second scenario, it is found that the signal strength of AIS is around a quarter of signal strength of marine VHF omnidirectional radio frequency (VHF-M) in dense marine traffic. In the third scenario, the ships in the search area are small vessels (about 60 tons). Therefore, a lower requirement of the search speed is required for AIS. The risk-benefit analysis illustrates the superiority and reliability of the AIS service, which is proved by the multiple real examples.

Updated: Nov 16, 2019 15:59 IST Loud cheers greeted India's student gurus when they were awarded the World Peace Literature Prize on Saturday at the New Delhi Literature Festival. "We feel very happy and honoured. On behalf of our village, our state, our country and everybody, I thank all of you," Thakkar Bapa said. László Németh, the former foreign minister of Hungary, presented the peace prize to the University of Glasgow's Institute of Translation and Book Studies, headquartered in Delhi. The institute received "a gracious" letter from the government of India for setting up the world peace literature prize, Németh said. "It's a wonderful story," he added. Read | New Delhi Literature Festival in Kerala: 'India is the land of small wisdom', poet says The institute was founded in 1977 and the peace prize was instituted by Queen Elizabeth II to honour people from all walks of life who have made an outstanding contribution to promoting global peace. In his remarks, Abhay Agashe, chairman of the institute, said: "

Q: Securing users & logins using Custom Membership We are currently using the built in ASP.NET Membership providers for users and accounts. We would like to make use of OAuth for authentication. My question is, when a user logs in and navigates to the securable ASP.NET controls, is that website using the current users login credentials? Or do we actually need to use the ASP.NET authentication stuff, as the OAuth provider would be servicing the login? Thanks, p.s. This seems like a newbie question but I've been stuck at this point for some time... A: I would advise doing OAuth as this will make it significantly easier to build on top of. As for using the ASP.NET Membership (or built-in forms authentication) then it is still running on the same host as your web application so the logged on user's identity is still being used and you need to ensure the user is the correct user. You don't necessarily need to use ASP.NET membership to use OAuth for authentication (although it is probably the best place to do it). See the link below for some advice on using OAuth as the mechanism for the authentication: Also see this for a simple sample using OAuth to login (again using ASP.NET Membership): Cheers Sunday, December 14, 2014 Last week was just so different for me. I had to go in early to work and then was not able to get to the office and was not able to do any work. That is the result of a really bad allergy attack on Thursday. So I had to take days off. On top of the bad allergy attack I had too much work to do and it prevented me from getting to sit at home and just relax. So this week will be a very different one for me. I have to keep moving. I have to work everyday. I need to get things done. Saturday, December 6, 2014 Have you ever seen a picture that literally took your breath away? No I am not talking about the Disney Pictures but rather a modern day image. That is the picture that I took from Google Images
