MOGADISHU/NAIROBI - The ongoing siege of Mogadishu, Somalia's capital, entered a fourth day on Tuesday (Nov 29), as the embattled government forces stand firm against the Islamist militant group al-Shabab. With no sign of a resolution, the world's worst humanitarian crisis and the worst military casualty count in Somalia since the early 1990s is taking on ominous, and possibly dire, dimensions, as two million people face the threat of famine, aid groups say. "It's a war without end, a human tragedy without end," UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres said during a visit to neighbouring Ethiopia on Tuesday. "If not resolved, this crisis is likely to last many more years." In its latest press release, the UN estimates the number of people in Mogadishu at 2 million. "This is a war without end as there are no end. This is a human tragedy without end for the population," Guterres said. Al-Shabab said it was not negotiating peace, which has been a longstanding demand of the US-backed government. "What we are doing here is war. We are not interested in peace at this moment," said a spokesman for the group's military wing, Abu Yasir. "If the government wants peace and wants to talk peace, we will talk peace together," he told reporters. Lack of international assistance The humanitarian crisis has gained international attention, prompting troop deployments in neighbouring countries and some strong words from UN chief Guterres. But while a pledge of US$12 million from the European Union (EU) could potentially reduce the casualties, this has yet to materialise. "Their deployment is coming in very late," said Mohamed Abdikadir Hussein, the UN undersecretary-general for humanitarian affairs. "We are deeply concerned about the security situation, which means that there's a security barrier, so the UN is not allowed to move around in the city," Hussein told Al Jazeera. "And all deliveries are being stopped," he added. According to the UN, 2.6 million people in Mogadishu are "stunted", meaning that they suffer from malnutrition. "

The present invention relates to a system for processing a plurality of items in a single multi-stage, batch-type operation, and more particularly, to such a system which is particularly suitable for the handling of foods and other products for human consumption. In prior art multi-stage, batch-type processing systems, a large number of items are carried along in a single flow stream where each item has a predetermined time period of residence in the flow stream before reaching an individual station. Each item is then sequentially treated at the individual station until completion. A problem often encountered in multi-stage batch-type processing systems is associated with various storage and transfer devices which have various sizes and shapes, and which take up various amounts of space as compared to the item being processed. Thus, if the desired products are to be processed with a single multi-stage batch-type processing system, a large number of such storage and transfer devices are required. In other words, in a multi-stage batch-type processing system, not only must an individual storage and transfer device be purchased for each item to be processed, but an even greater number of such storage and transfer devices must be purchased for the batch-type processing system as a whole. The prior art, in the design of multi-stage, batch-type processing systems, has not addressed the problem of how to minimize the number of storage and transfer devices required. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,183,400 discloses a system for a multi-stage batch-type operation which uses a plurality of transfer devices, where each transfer device is a transportation device which receives products from a common container, and transfers them to a sorting station and then to storage stations which are also operated with a single container. Furthermore, this system requires that the transfer devices have a common container, and that the containers be designed to transfer single items to a central location, and then to the individual sorting, storage, and transfer stations. Because the containers must contain single items only, they are necessarily large, thereby requiring an even larger number of transfer devices. Other U.S. Patents relating to multi-stage, batch-type processing systems include U.S. Pat. No. 4,319,353; U.S. Pat. No. 4,467,829; U.S. Pat. No. 4,541,137; U.S. Pat. No. 4,608,695; U.S. Pat. No. 4,
